Griffon vultures are second largest vultures in Europe with 8.3 ft wide wingspan. They have a poor sense of smell and to locate food they rely exclusively on excellent eyesight, a soaring vulture is able to spot a 3-foot carcass from a distance of 4 miles. They have poorly developed taste buds.

'Urohydrolysis' is a process in which an animal urinates on itself in order to cool down when temperatures reach blistering highs. However, vultures also use this technique as a means to disinfect their legs of bacteria following a feed on a rotten carcass as their urine possesses high levels of acid.
