Old fortifications

A wall is a vertical structure, usually solid, that defines and sometimes protects an area. Before the invention of artillery, many of the world's cities and towns, particularly in Europe and Asia, had boundary walls. In fact, the English word "wall" is derived from Latin vallum, which was a type of fortification wall. Since they are no longer relevant for defence, such cities have grown beyond their walls, and many of the wall, or portions thereof, have been torn down.

Old fortifications

Fortifications are military constructions and buildings designed for defence in warfare and military bases. Humans have constructed defensive works for many thousands of years, in a variety of increasingly complex designs. The word fortification can also refer to the practice of improving an area's defence with defensive works. The art of setting out a military camp or constructing a fortification traditionally classifies as castramentation, since the time of the Roman legions.

Round towers

Round towers on a keep or on a curtain wall assisted defence as it was believed that any form of missile thrown or catapulted at the castle would deflect off of a rounded surface. Also if the enemy tried to dig under a castle to undermine a weak corner, they would not find a corner on a round tower! So this form of attack was useless against a castle with rounded towers.

FLORENCE (Italy) Palazzo Vecchio (o della Signoria)

It is the town hall of Florence and in 1299 Arnolfo di Cambio began constructing it upon the ruins Palazzo dei Fanti e Palazzo dell'Esecutore di Giustizia. The solid cubicle stone buildings is enhanced by the simple tower "Torre d'Arnolfo" with its Giorgio Lederle's clock. The palace is built in solid rusticated stonework, with two rows of two lighted gothic windows, each with a trefoil arch.

It is crowned with projecting crenellated battlement, supported by small arches and corbels. In the "Salone del 550" on the walls are large and expansive frescoes, one of these by the Ghirlandaio. The chapel is decorated by Bronzino.
